

Student Learning Outcomes for B.A. in Political Science

1. Have a basic knowledge of the political institutions and processes of the government of the United States.
2. Have a basic knowledge of political theory, political systems around the globe, and/or political in the international arena.
3. Understand the role of empirical evidence in relation to scientific theories.
4. Demonstrate critical thinking skills as well as formulate and defend a thesis in written and verbal forms of communication.
5. Design and apply appropriate research methods to investigate political questions, including:
 - formulate well reasoned questions for political inquiry
 - gather empirical evidence
 - summarize empirical evidence
 - evaluate what the empirical evidence implies for the research questions
 - effectively communicate the results of empirical inquiry
6. Possess the skills required to use political science knowledge in the 21st century, including technological competence for:
 - conducting research
 - searching for literature and other scholarly resources
 - analyzing information
 - writing reports
 - presenting results

o good citizenship